

INT. LAUNDROMAT - DAY

KIERSTEN, a femme lesbian in her early 20s, throws another load of her brightly colored laundry into the wash. To her left is a pile of freshly dried clothes. She begins to fold them neatly.

CHARLIE, a butch lesbian in their mid-20s, opens up the washing machine in front of them. They look into the machine and scowl. Charlie holds up a red sock and turns to the other patrons of the laundromat.

CHARLIE
(annoyed)
Anybody missing a sock?

KIERSTEN
Oh! Um, yes, I am actually.

Charlie's expression immediately softens.

CHARLIE
Cool, cool. Here ya go.

Kiersten walks over to Charlie. They toss the sock to Kiersten, who catches it awkwardly.

Charlie starts unloading their laundry into the dryer, and the two realize the damage the single sock made: Charlie's shirts are a radiant pink.

KIERSTEN
Those weren't pink to start with,
were they?

CHARLIE
You don't think I'd wear pink?

KIERSTEN
No, no. I just mean—

CHARLIE
'Cause you'd be right.

KIERSTEN
I'm so sorry. I have no idea how my sock got in there.

CHARLIE
Good thing most of my clothes are black.

KIERSTEN

(playfully)

I see some gray in there, don't sell yourself short.

CHARLIE

I've actually been preparing for this exact moment. You never know when a beautiful girl is gonna come into your life and turn your button-downs pink.

KIERSTEN

I think it'll suit you. Pink is a nice color, no matter who wears it!

CHARLIE

Well of course you'd say that.

KIERSTEN

What do you—

Kiersten glances at her pile of clothes—it's almost all pink and red and white.

KIERSTEN (CONT'D)

Ah, ok. Touché.

They stand awkwardly, looking at each other, then around the laundromat. Charlie breaks the silence.

CHARLIE

I might need some help exploring this new realm of fashion.

KIERSTEN

Yeah?

CHARLIE

And you seem like the perfect guide.

Kiersten looks at Charlie, sizing them up. She takes her phone out of her pocket and hands it to Charlie.

KIERSTEN

Give me a call, and I'd be happy to help.

Charlie takes her phone and nods, trying to play it cool but failing—their face is as pink as their new clothes.

FADE TO BLACK.